Philadelphia TidbitsAs laid out by the founder, William Penn, the settlement Philadelphia, was comprised of only that portion of the current community located between Vine and South Streets and the Schuylkill and Delaware Rivers. However, the fact is that the city proper was that portion between Dock Creek and Market (High) Street. This is where the early settlers built shelters on the higher land or dug caves in the banks of the Delaware River. In the meantime, the women were just as busy lighting a fire on the bare earth, and having traveling from one place to another with a kettle slung between two poles upon a transverse pole. This was all part of the preparation of the frugal and homely meal for the hardworking builders.
